Texas. The "Post Headquarters Squadron" deactivated 19 August 1919, but was called back to service on 29 June 1923 as the 111th Observation Squadron, 36th Division, Texas Air National Guard. The squadron flew the Curtiss JN-6H "Jenny" until 1927, followed by the O-2s, the Douglas O-38 in the 1931, then in 1938 the O-43As and O-47s. With the onset of WW II, the unit was federalized. By November 1942 the unit moved to Europe. From June 1943 through May 1945, the 111th Tactical Reconnaissance Squadron Flew 3,840 reconnaissance missions in the P-51. The 111th accounted for 44 enemy aircraft destroyed, 29 damaged and claimed 12 probable kills. During the Korean War, the squadron flew close-air support and interdiction missions, destroying two MIG-15s. Between 1952 and 1959 the squadron flew many aircraft including the F-80, F-86D and F-86L. In August 1960, the unit became one of the first to transition to the F-102A all-weather fighter interceptor and began a 24-hour alert to guard the Texas Gulf Coast. By January 1970, the wing started a new mission: training all F-102 pilots in the United States for the Air National Guard. On 6 May 1971 the unit received F-101F fighter interceptors and became the training center for all Air Guard interceptors. The Air Force deactivated Ellington Air Force Base on 1 April 1976 and the 147th Fighter Interceptor Group (FIG) took over its transition to the State of Texas Air National Guard. In October 1978, the 147th won the United States Air Force Air-to-Air Weapons Meet-"William Tell" in F-101s, and again in 1980. The 147th converted to F-4Cs in 1982, and the F-4D in November 1986. In October 1988, the 147th won the F-4 Maintenance Award at William Tell. The 147th converted to the F-16A in September 1989, and by June 1992 converted to F-16A air defense fighters. The unit was re-designated the 147th Fighter Wing (FW) in October 1995 and by September 1996, the 147th FW was converting to F-16Cs. In October 1998 the 147th Fighter Wing became a multi purpose unit with an air-to-ground mission while retaining its alert tasking. During Sept 11th 2001 the 147th Fighter Wing escorted The President of the United States and has done combat duty in Iraq. Throughout all the past and present changes, the 147th Fighter Wing remains an essential part of the total force and one of the finest units in the Air National Guard.

MOAA Praises Disability Benefits Commission Report

2007/10/05 15:36:00

Alexandria, Va...The Military Officers Association of America (MOAA) applauds the Veterans' Disability Benefits Commission (VDBC) upon the release of its long-anticipated report at an Oct. 3 press conference on Capitol Hill before several military and veteran organizations. The VDBC's 540-page report titled "Honoring the Call to Duty: Veterans' Disability Benefits in the 21st Century" includes 113 recommendations for DoD, VA, and Congress to consider.

"We are pleased that after two years of studying the various aspects of veteran disability benefits, the Congressional commission charged with making recommendations to modernize veterans' disability payments is recommending full concurrent receipt, elimination of SBP - DIC offsets and other changes that reflect a number of MOAA priorities," said MOAA president VADM Norb R. Ryan, Jr. USN (Ret.)

The recommendations call for complete overhaul of the current DoD and VA disability processes. The commission highlighted 14 priority recommendations that include several MOAA goals for retirees, survivors, and veterans. Some of these major recommendations include -

- VA disability compensation should be upgraded to reflect adverse effects on quality of life (QOL). Congress should increase compensation for the severely disabled up to 25 percent as an interim measure pending development and implementation of a QOL measure in the VA's rating schedule.
- VA should begin to modernize the current rating schedule, beginning with more appropriate evaluation and rating of PTSD and TBI.
- VA should establish a holistic approach that couples PTSD treatment, compensation, and vocational assessment.
- Congress should eliminate the disability offset to military retired pay for all disabled retirees and the offset to disability severance pay for members separated due to service-connected disabilities.
- VA and DoD should realign the disability evaluation process so that the Services determine fitness for continuation on duty, while VA assigns disability ratings for use by DoD as well as VA.
- Congress should eliminate the deduction of VA Dependency and Indemnity Compensation from military Survivor Benefit Plan annuities.
- VA and DoD should expedite development and implementation of compatible information systems.

Many of these recommendations carry a hefty price tag. But Chairman James Terry Scott, LTG, USA (Ret.) said the commission was not influenced by cost. "When we discussed options, we talked about the cost of a particular recommendation just so we'd know what we were talking about," he said. "But we did not let that be the determining factor of whether we made it into a recommendation."
